

Local Author, Corrine Ardoin, gears up for the launch of her newest book: Mothers of Pine Way

May 13, 2021 marks the day Black Rose Writing releases Mothers of Pine Way to the reading public worldwide!

Currently only available through the publisher on preorder, Mothers of Pine Way will then be made available on Amazon, Barnes and Noble, and other fine booksellers.

Author of local birding guides and A Natural History of the Nipomo Mesa Region, Corrine Ardoin's first novel was published by Black Rose Writing in 2020. Fathers of Edenville soon became Book One of the Pine Valley Series. Mothers of Pine Way is Book Two.

About the author:

Corrine Ardoin has written poetry, songs, short stories, essays, prose, and fiction. A varied career, she has performed at the Strawberry Festival and the Literacy Council's Poetry Festival. She has led birdwatching walks for the La Purisima Audubon Society and the Nipomo Dana Adobe. She received her certificate in energy healing from the Four Winds Society after several years training. Corrine and her husband, Dan, live on the Central Coast of California.

Excerpt from Mothers of Pine Way:

Candelaria was shaking from a power filling her as she went on, "You are the voices of the oppressed and the dishonored, whose very right to be in this country, to live and to work here, has been denied through resentment, hatred, fear, and prejudice." She paused, looking around at the faces directed her way, everyone quiet. "I have also been oppressed, my voice gone unheard. I have lived with the put-downs, the name-calling, and disrespect for having brown skin and for being Mexican."

Something shifted in her again and she awoke to the dancing spirits in colored buckskin that encircled her . . .

For further information, visit Corrine's website:
<http://corrine.ardoin.us>

Thank you!